WHEELING, FEBRUARY 6, 1893.

Time to Call a Halt.
The governor of Texas has promised to bring to justice the leaders of the mob that burned and tortured to death Henry Smith, at Paris, last week, but it is not likely that anything will ever come of the matter. It is a matter in which the whole country is concerned, and public sentiment throughout the union is indignant over the outrage, whatever the people of Texas may think of it.

Newspapers, north and south, have united in denouncing the affair as a national disgrace, and the governor of Texas owes it not alone to Texas, but to the country, to vindicate the dignity of the law. The New York Herald, in a lengthy editorial, announces the outrage committed by the mob in a way which will find endorsement in the minds of all good citizens, when it says: "That it should be possible in America, within sight of free schools and churches, is something so abhorrent to every sense of decency, to every sentiment of manhood, that we shudder at the thought and turn sick at the recital."
It is a seam of lead in our block of gold, a satire on our civilization, an act so base and unworthy that it can be applauded only by the denizens of the infernal regions.

The deed committed by the negro was one of the most horrible and brutal in the history of crime, but the laws of the country provided for its punishment. The punishment adopted by the citizens of Paris was atrocious in its nature, and disgraceful and demoralizing in its effect.

An act, even when the result of a popular uprising in a community, which horrifies all the world and is denounced by respecters of law and order everywhere, is a disgrace to the people permitting it and a shame to civilization. No matter what provocation the mob had for its barbarous conduct, the governor of Texas should do his duty. Mob law is becoming too popular in this country, and it is time for something to be done looking to a restoration of civilized methods of dealing with offenders.

A Record of Prosperity.
The Norwich, Connecticut, Bulletin publishes an interesting exhibit of the remarkable prosperity of that state, as shown in the savings banks statistics, and draws from it a moral. The exhibit shows that nearly half the entire population, or 331,061 people, have deposits in savings banks. Of over nine persons in the whole population of Connecticut four have money laid by for a rainy day in the savings banks. These figures show more eloquently than words that the great mass of the people are able to earn more than they need to supply their daily wants.

Only about 105,000 votes were cast at the recent election in Connecticut, says the Bulletin. That is less than half the number of savings bank depositors. It means that thousands of women and minors as well as citizens of voting qualifications are laying by their little overplus. Nor can the importance of the figures be weakened by the assertion that there are many rich men included in the list. There are but 183 savings bank depositors in the whole state with over $10,000 to their credit. There are 320,111 with less than $2,000. The average for the entire number of depositors is $394.75 each.

In 1892 there was a gain of $8,104,562 in the amount of savings and 13,136 in the number of depositors. This was the year following the enactment of the McKinley bill and these Connecticut savings bank depositors are wage workers in protected industries. In view of these striking facts and figures it is strange that the same year a majority of the voters of Connecticut voted against the policy of protection under which all this prosperity has been possible.

The Chicago Dispatch's construction of President Harrison's action in appointing Judge Jackson to the supreme bench as a confession that the Republican party does not contain any first-class judicial material, is the silliest of the many silly comments made on the matter.

The fact that President-elect Cleveland sent for Hon. W. L. Wilson, of this state, and has been in conference with him at Lakewood has revived the talk connecting Mr. Wilson's name with a cabinet position. It is an open secret, however, that Mr. Cleveland's personal desire is for Mr. Wilson to remain in the house, where, as his personal representative, the West Virginia statesman can be of greater service to him than if could possibly be in the cabinet. The true significance of Mr. Wilson's visit to the President-elect doubtless is that he will have a great deal to say about the distribution of patronage in West Virginia. The boys who do not stand in with Mr. Wilson would do well to cultivate his acquaintance at once.

The South and Protection.
A census bulletin, just issued, gives statistics of the iron and steel industries of the southern states. The bulletin is interesting because it shows the remarkable progress made in the erection of iron-making plants in the south. According to the summary given at the beginning of the report the amount of capital invested in the blast furnace branch of the industry "has increased from $16,904,207 in 1880 to $33,207,370 in 1890, an increase of $16,243,163, or 95.75 per cent, while the tonnage quantity of production increased from 350,436 net tons in 1880 to 1,834,586 net tons in 1890, an increase of 1,484,150 net tons, or 423.52 per cent.

"The capital invested in rolling mills and steel works has increased from $11,605,260 in 1880 to $17,528,090 in 1890, an increase of $5,922,830, or 50.20 per cent, while the production of these works increased from 290,324 net tons in 1880 to 515,775 net tons in 1890, an increase of 225,451 net tons, or 77.65 per cent. This increase of tonnage is confined exclusively to the manufacture of steel products."

In West Virginia in 1890 there was $6,488,924 invested, an increase of $3,913,616, and the average number of hands employed was 3,757, the value of the product being $10,000,000.

Alabama has made the greatest advance of all the southern states, the capital invested increasing from $3,000,000 in 1880 to $19,000,000 in 1890, and the value of the product increasing from $1,000,000 to $12,000,000.

The report shows not only a gratifying progress in the erection of iron and steel plants, but rapid development of the south's mineral resources. There has also been a tending toward a concentration of the industry.
"The work of development in 'the new south' has only begun; there are great possibilities for the iron and steel industry in these states, if our lawmakers at Washington will leave it alone, and not interrupt its progress by taking from it that protection under which the whole south is now prospering. We have, however, been served with notice from the free trade party which has been elected to power that not only will the present tariff be repealed, but that, in the course of time, every vestige of protection will be wiped away. This is not an enchanting outlook for the industrial interests of this favored section.

It is very generous of England to say that if the United States wants to annex Hawaii she will not interfere but let destiny have her way. The United States, will, however, not be governed by anything England may say or do. We are not in the habit of asking the British government's permission before acting and are not likely to begin to do so now.

The proposition to establish a permanent census bureau, which is now before Congress, being favorably reported from the committee, ought to be adopted, especially since it has been ascertained that it would involve no extra expenditure. The committee ascertained that the work can be carried on with greater economy than under the present system.

The Mugwump Evening Post, of New York, can not find in it's heart a kindly thought for Mr. Blaine, even after his death. It is one of the few old enemies of the great statesman that have not the decency to bury its hatred now that the one so bitterly hated is in his grave.

The Washington Post, assuming that Hawaii will be annexed, nominates Congressman Thomas Watson, of Georgia, for custodian of volcanoes. Why does the Post ignore the claims of Mr. Kilgore, of Texas?

SENATOR VEST is indignant in a great deal of partisan talk, which reminds us that a contemporary the other day appropriately suggested that Missouri should pull down her Vest.

AMOS CUMMINGS is determined to annex Canada whether she wants to be annexed or not. There are a few little details to be arranged, but they do not seem to worry Amos much.

LIBERIA invites immigration to her shores. America is perfectly willing to divide with her. She may have as many of our immigrants as she wants and welcome.

PERSONAL POINTS.

Lady Somerset, who has been accused of incompetency in dealing part of her income from a source that she persistently condemns, makes this explanation: "I inherited my father's estates ten years ago, and since that time have been enabled to close eight public houses. I have during that time been offered considerable sums of money to extend leases before they fall in, but have always refused. I have never renewed the lease of a licensed house, nor do I ever intend to do so. All who understand the management of property are aware that, until a lease falls into the hands of a ground landlord, it is not his property, and he cannot deal with it in any way."

Among the peers who become of age this year is the Earl of Granville, who will attain his majority on March 4th. On one occasion he alarmed his family and friends greatly by swallowing a half crown silver piece, little larger than our half dollar. It never occurred to him any inconvenience, however, owing, no doubt, to the prompt change he was given by the doctor's orders.

A Wyoming caucus has nominated Mr. Corn for Senator from that State. His light should not be under a bushel. The Jeff Davis Monument Association has adopted resolutions in favor of disinterring the remains of the Confederacy's president and remove them from New Orleans to Richmond, there to be reinterred in Hollywood on May 30, and has appointed a committee to consult with Mrs. Davis and arrange the details.

The authorship of the song, "Away Down South in Dixie," is undergoing discussion again in the southern papers, and with about as much likelihood of its origin being definitely settled as there is of reaching an agreement as to the authorship of "Beautiful Snow."

JACKSON'S APPOINTMENT.

He Knew His Man.
J. M. Cannon in Philadelphia Ledger.

The nomination of Judge Jackson to the vacancy in the United States supreme court occasioned considerable surprise at the capitol, and called out severe criticism from those Republicans who believe that a Republican should have been selected. In this instance it was President Harrison's desire to select a Republican, if one could be found in the South possessing the qualifications which the President deems necessary for so exalted a position. Above all things he wanted fitness and character, and a Southern man. There were but two names suggested from the South among Republicans, namely, Judge Speer, of Georgia, and Judge Pardee, of Louisiana. Neither came up to the standard of the President. Judge Jackson served in the senate with the President, and is therefore personally well known to him. There is no doubt about his confirmation.

To Freeze Out Gresham.
Chicago Inter Ocean.

There is naturally much difference of opinion as to the motives that influenced President Harrison in appointing Jackson. It is stated on one hand that he acted on the advice of prominent Republican Senators, and on the other hand that he appointed a Democrat whose confirmation was assured to prevent President Cleveland from appointing Judge Gresham to the supreme bench.

A Statesman of Statesmen.
Baltimore American (Rep.).

President Harrison, by the appointment of Judge Jackson to the vacancy on the supreme court bench, caused by the death of Justice Lamar, has again exhibited that exalted statesmanship and patriotism which make him almost unique among the Presidents of the United States.

Unqualifiedly Approved.
Philadelphia Record (Dem.).

Few of President Harrison's official acts throughout his four years incumbency of the chief magistracy have met with such instant and unqualified public approval as has been accorded to the nomination for associate justice of the supreme court of ex-Senator Howell E. Jackson, of Tennessee.

Spiked the Guns.
New York Times (Dem.).

By appointing as the successor of the late Justice Lamar on the bench of the supreme court Judge Howell E. Jackson, of the Sixth Judicial Circuit, President Harrison has at once disarmed criticism for his course in making the appointment so near the end of his own term of office and kept good his record for selecting men for judicial offices who are excellently qualified.

Delicious Criticism.
New York Press (Rep.).

The nomination of Judge Howell E. Jackson, of the United States circuit court, to fill the vacancy on the supreme court bench occasioned by the death of Justice Lamar, is one that defies criticism from the standpoint of broad public policy.

A Gracious Act.
Baltimore Sun (Dem.).

President Harrison has performed a graceful act, and at the same time given the country a surprise by the appointment of a Democrat to succeed the late Associate Justice Lamar on the supreme court bench.

An Excellent Selection.
New York World (Dem.).

In nominating Circuit Judge Howell E. Jackson, of Tennessee, for associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, to succeed the late Justice Lamar, President Harrison has made an excellent selection.

Prudent and Satisfactory.
Philadelphia Times (Ind. Dem.).

The nomination of Howell E. Jackson, of Tennessee, to the vacancy in the supreme court of the United States, is prudent and satisfactory.

STATE PRESS.

Wheeling's Redemption.
Martinsburg Herald.

Wheeling has redeemed its good name by the election of Mayor Caldwell, Republican. For years the evil genius has been laughing at the law and order and respectability of the good name of Wheeling and the intelligence of its Christian people, who have at last combined to try the effect of a change in municipal power, which we hope will be for the better. If the good element in New York could overthrow the corrupt, plundering gang of city thieves and rascals, what a victory and encouragement and power it would be for the voice of the people.

Speaking Out Loud.
Buckhannon Banner.

We don't want any constitutional convention called for this state. There is no use turning fool because the Democrats carried it once more after a good scare. We won't carry it and oughtn't to if we indulge in much convention business. We are speaking out loud, and want you to hear us.

A Fair Away Verdict.
Brazton Central.

B. F. Caldwell, the Republican nominee, was elected mayor of Wheeling, last Thursday. Many Democrats, who were not violently enamored of the way the present incumbent of the mayor's office stood in with the saloonkeepers, gamblers and other malicious people, voted against him, he having been renominated.

The Gambling Laws.
Anti Journal.

The present legislature could do no better act than to amend the gambling laws so as to give the people a prompt and ready remedy. If losing $20.50 is a crime, isn't gambling for $19 one? Do the gamblers own the state also? Pass an effective gambling law.

A Mixed Affair.
Moorefield Examiner.

The municipal election at Wheeling last Thursday was a rather mixed affair. The Democrats elected eighteen of the thirty-six councilmen, giving them a majority of two on joint ballot, and also elected the whole city ticket except mayor.

Here, Too.
Parkersburg State Journal.

A bill for the suppression of houses of ill fame has been ordered to its third reading in the house. It provides that any person renting a house to be used for immoral purposes shall be subject to the same penalty as the person keeping the house.

The enforcement of a law of that kind in Parkersburg would create quite a stir.

Ah, who Could, Indeed!
Register Report of Limby Ball.

It was a novel dance in some respects, one of which was that there was not sufficient natural gas to picture all the glitter and the glamour that was there. In reality the party only half bloomed, but to judge from the unceasing merriment that prevailed it was none the less enjoyable. In some way the arteries in the main pipe became clogged, and a very limited quantity of the aciform fluid came to a focus in the gas jets. It was particularly dim in the gentlemen's dressing room, reminding one of a scene off the coast about half past eight in March, while the general aspect in the ball room proper was in a sense unobscured. But lots of jolly dancers were there, splendid music was furnished by the Opera House orchestra, the decorations were well arranged, the supper was out of the usual run, the toilets of the fair ones were entrancing—with all this who could not enjoy himself without the full effulgence?

DEVOTION OF A DOG.

An Example of Brute Heroism in a Fatal Fire Near Oakdale, Pa.
Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Joseph Leonard, an oil man, met his death in a burning house, near Oakdale, about 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning. He was only twenty years old. A faithful Newfoundland dog was killed trying to save him, and the charred bodies of the two were found near together.

The house was a one-story frame, containing four rooms. It was the property of E. P. Kroizer, foreman of Gully and Gailey, oil producers, and was occupied by Kroizer, his son and three workmen in his employ, among them Leonard. The house had a one-half inch gas pipe in it, coming through the side, with an elbow, which the men would light in the mornings to warm up by before going to work. Leonard having worked all Friday and Friday night and up until 2 o'clock a. m., was not awaked yesterday morning. The balance of the men went to their work. At 10 o'clock the house was in flames. When Kroizer reached the house it was a mass of burning ruins. After the heat had subsided sufficiently they made a search and found the body of Leonard, a charred mass, unrecognizable and past identification.

It is supposed that the young man, feeling chilly, got up, turned on the gas, laid down again and fell asleep. The bed was only a short distance away from the gaspipe, and the bed clothing ignited. Inhaling the flames, Leonard was burnt to such an extent and so quickly that he had no time to escape and was cremated. The charred trunk was shipped to Millerstown to a widow-mother.

A large Newfoundland dog, the pet of the five oil well workers, had free access to the four rooms of the house while his masters were at their work. The fire started, and the brute knowing that one of his masters lay asleep in an adjoining room, went to the bedside and tried to arouse him, not knowing he was then dead. The brute in his vain attempts to arouse the man was overpowered by the flames, and dropped dead at Leonard's feet. When the body of Leonard was found stretched across the bed, or rather where the bed should have been, the charred trunk of the faithful animal was found lying at the foot.
